

  SADDLEBACK Classics

AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS

JULES VERNE

ADAPTED BY Janice Greene

 SADDLEBACK Classics

The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn	The Last of the Mohicans
The Adventures of Tom Sawyer	The Man in the Iron Mask
Around the World in Eighty Days	Moby Dick
The Call of the Wild	Oliver Twist
Captains Courageous	Pride and Prejudice
A Christmas Carol	The Prince and the Pauper
The Count of Monte Cristo	The Red Badge of Courage
Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde	Robinson Crusoe
Dracula	The Scarlet Letter
Frankenstein	Swiss Family Robinson
Great Expectations	A Tale of Two Cities
Gulliver's Travels	The Three Musketeers
The Hound of the Baskervilles	The Time Machine
The Hunchback of Notre Dame	Treasure Island
Jane Eyre	20,000 Leagues Under the Sea
The Jungle Book	The War of the Worlds
Kidnapped	White Fang

Development and Production: Laurel Associates, Inc.

Cover and Interior Art: Black Eagle Productions

Three Watson
Irvine, CA 92618-2767
E-Mail: info@sdlback.com
Website: www.sdlback.com

Copyright © 2006 by Saddleback Educational Publishing. All rights reserved.
No part of this book may be reproduced in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without the written permission of the publisher.

ISBN 1-56254-863-8

Printed in the United States of America

11 10 09 08 07 06 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

CONTENTS

- 1 A Daring Bet 5
- 2 En Route to Egypt 12
- 3 A Delay in Bombay 20
- 4 An Unexpected Traveling
Companion 30
- 5 Leaving Passepartout Behind 36
- 6 An Adventure in Yokohama 44
- 7 A Cross-Country Train Ride 52
- 8 Captured by the Sioux 59
- 9 Commandeering the Henrietta 67
- 10 Winning More than Money 73

S 1 A Daring Bet

In 1872, Mr. Phileas Fogg lived in a fashionable part of London. People there knew almost nothing about him.

Was Phileas Fogg rich? Certainly, he was rich. And he was often generous. But how had he made his money? No one would think of asking him such a question.

He spoke very little. This made him seem even more mysterious. His daily habits could easily be observed. But everything he did was precisely what he had always done.

Had he traveled? Most likely he had. No one seemed to know the world better.

He seemed to have neither wife nor children. He lived alone—a single servant was all he needed. But Phileas Fogg was not an easy master. On the first of October, he fired his servant, James Forster. Forster had brought him shaving water that was 84 degrees instead of 86!

On October 2, Mr. Fogg waited for his new servant to arrive. He watched his clock. It showed the hours, the minutes, the seconds, the days, the months, and the years.

Then Fogg heard someone knocking. When he answered the door, a young man of about 30 stepped forward and bowed.

“You are a Frenchman, I believe,” said Phileas Fogg, “and your name is John?”

“Jean, if you please, monsieur,” the man said. “Jean Passepartout. You probably know that passepartout means ‘go everywhere’ in French. I have this name because I have gone from one business to another. I’ve been a singer and a circus-rider. I’ve been a professor of gymnastics and a fireman. But I left France to become a valet in England. I heard that you are the most exact and regular gentleman in the country. I have come to you with the hope of living a quiet life. I now wish to forget the name Passepartout.”

“Passepartout suits me,” Mr. Fogg said. “I have heard many good things about you. It is now exactly twenty-nine minutes past eleven A.M. Today is Wednesday, October second, and you are now in my service.”

With that, Phileas Fogg put on his hat and went out the door. He said not a word. Passepartout was alone in the house.

During his brief talk with Mr. Fogg, Passepartout had studied him carefully. Mr. Fogg seemed to be about 40 years old. He was a tall, well-built man. His features were fine and handsome. His hair and whiskers were light. His eyes were calm and clear.

Fogg never made a move that was not necessary. He never took an extra step. Wherever he went, he went by the shortest route. He avoided most people’s company, knowing they would slow him down.

Passepartout had searched in vain for a master after his own heart. He was an honest man, with a pleasant face. He had a good, round head. It was the kind of head one likes to see on the shoulders of a friend. His body was compact, solid, and muscular.

Now Passepartout explored Mr. Fogg’s house from top to bottom. It was warm and